In reply to your questions about the National Archives studies on paper and tapes:

1. Beyond the attached note indicating an interest in the very chemical content of paper manufacturing, we cannot find many details on the proposed study of paper by National Archives. We will continue to seek out advance information on their plans.

2. We and all Government agencies have received an inventory questionnaire from NARS about magnetic tape volumes on hand, their content, and those of archival longevity. [redacted] is the Project Officer doing the initial review of the requirements involved. We will be in touch with you on this soon, because we feel the Information Processing Coordinators should be asked to gather the information or set forth the security restrictions precluding our participation or response. (Advance samples of forms attached).

Vince,

I talked to Joe Bradt at Archives and he said F-7036 is for archival type material that may eventually wind up in National Archives. They are primarily interested in getting the Bureau of Labor Statistics, Internal Revenue, Census, Federal Reserve, etc. other information that has more than a short term value. They want to set up a library for researchers, economists, and others that now complain about having to contact scads of offices for info they need. Archives doesn't intend to do anything with classified types that need to be looked up for security reasons. I said our material wouldn't go to Archives anyway so he said we could indicate that our archival material is kept in CIA Archives and that would take care of F7036.

The other F 7025 - they would like to have any general unclassified info that we could give them.
